2012 is coming to an end, that means that we now have another year to look forward to. This could be a year where we become more active in the surrounding airports in the area. This could also be the year that we increase our active membership to twice it's size. There is so much to do, but we will only get it done if we all work together and help each other out. As a Chapter we have a lot of collective experience. We have CFI's, professional pilots, pilots with thousands of hours, let's start thinking about how we can use our skills to bring more people to the airports and support general aviation.

For now enjoy the holidays, be with your family and friends. If nothing else enjoy the great central California weather that December brings.

Pilot Safety Tip – Student or Inexperienced Pilot
For more info, go to FAASafety.gov

A student pilot landed at a busy international airport and was cleared by ground control to taxi to the ramp. Instead, he taxied back onto the runway where another aircraft had been cleared to takeoff. The student pilot did not have a diagram of the airport, and claimed to have been distracted by other cockpit duties when he followed the “wrong yellow taxi line.”

Unfamiliar airports can seem like a jungle even to the most experienced pilot. The leading causes of runway incursions by low-time GA pilots are inadequate knowledge or experience with ATC procedures and inadequate experience operating at the airport layout.

All pilots, but especially Student Pilots and low-time pilots, should carefully review the meaning of ATC instructions. Don't ever proceed to enter or cross a runway unless you are cleared for takeoff, instructed to line up and wait, or told to cross the runway. Controllers do not have to issue hold short instructions in every instance – so don't assume that because you did not hear “hold short” that you can cross the hold line. And if you have any questions – stop your aircraft and ask.

As a Student Pilot, you should always have an airport diagram available for every airport you plan to visit during your flight. Another way student and inexperienced pilots can work to prevent causing a runway incursion is to brush up on your understanding of what the airport signs and markings mean before you fly. The FAA Runway Safety web site is a great source of information that should be used to refresh your understanding of the signs and markings you will see at the airports you fly in and out of.

One of the most common sayings in aviation is that your pilot certificate is a license to learn. If you are a student pilot – or a low-time pilot - consider identifying yourself as a “student pilot”, or your need for assistance to ATC. When you are taxiing your aircraft, keep looking around. There is always something you might miss, and remember, you are always a student while flying.
